Are you thinking...is that campsite abandoned?

Answer A: Risking loss of my membership and maybe even criminal prosecution for theft, I'll just go by last year's campsite sticker color and start stealing stuff when nobody's looking.

Or Answer B: Only a Rausch Creek manager can tell me what's truly abandoned. THE ANSWER ISSS B! *Remember that little pop quiz you passed...

DO NOT go scrounging until you get confirmation that that particular site you've been eyeing up is available or the items on the site are up for grabs.

Spring Ahead

Few people relish the lost hour of sleep that comes with the daylight saving time change. As we move our clocks forward each spring, it often takes people awhile to fully adjust to the shift of time. However, if you look at this seasonal change in the right light, we're sure you can find some advantages to "springing forward!" Get active after work, see a sunrise...here's your fact of the day!

The time change begins on Sunday, March 8, at 2 a.m., when clocks are moved forward by one hour. Why 2 a.m.? The time change is set for 2 a.m. because it was decided to be the least disruptive time of day. Moving time forward or back an hour at that time doesn't change the date, which avoids confusion, and most people are asleep, or if people do work on a Sunday, it's usually later than 2 a.m.

Do all states observe daylight saving time? Hawaii and most of Arizona don't observe the time change. U.S. territories that don't go on daylight saving time include American Samoa, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Why do we have it? The idea is to save electricity because there are more hours of natural light. Studies have shown the savings to be fairly nominal—the time change leading people to switch on the lights earlier in the morning instead or cranking up the air conditioning, for example.

Interesting enough, daylight saving time had always been in April—until the Energy Policy Act of 2005 ordered the earlier start time to begin in March 2007. You're welcome!
