Gift Giving from the Garden

Edible Gifts

Naturally, the best time to make gifts from the garden is during the growing season. You can turn that abundance of seasonal fruits, vegetables, and herbs into a wealth of garden gifts. Try some of these inspirational ideas for creating your own edible homegrown gifts:

Fruit Jam & Jelly Who doesn't enjoy real fruit jam? Make a small gift basket using half pints of strawberry, apple, raspberry, or pepper jelly. Take this gift basket over the top by including a loaf of homemade bread.

Homemade Fruit Candy From jelly squares to fruit leather, the natural sugars found in many types of homegrown fruit is healthier than store-bought sweets. Buy a few decorative tins at the local dollar store and you've got the perfect do-it-yourself garden gift for recipients of any age.

Baked Goods Turn that mountain of zucchini, pumpkins, or carrots into breads, cookies, and cakes. These handmade garden gifts can be baked from prepared, frozen produce for that fresh-out-of-the-oven flavor. Add a homemade gift tag and seasonal bow.

Pickles From refrigerator dills or sweets to homemade relish, create edible do-it-yourself garden gifts with a tangy ensemble of homemade pickled veggies. Add a jar of pickled watermelon rinds to sweeten the collection.

Handmade garden gifts are a unique, special way to show how much you care. These gifts from the garden make perfect presents for a hostess, close friend, or family member. Homegrown gifts are appropriate for the holidays, birthdays, or any day a loved one benefits from feeling special.
